Not counting the stork, which temporarily abides in the neighboring chimneys, eight species of birds nest upon the great building, where six of them have become very numerous. The kestrel, the barn owl, the domestic sparrow and the common pigeon remain' throughout the year the jackdaw, the chimney swallow, the martin and the redstart being transitory guests. Besides these, the established fauna embraces three or four species of bats, the common mouse and the church rat, a butterfly, some spiders and a few ants; while the huge stone spire, rising 465 feet above the pavement, is the rendezvous of ousands of insects that wander in the air. The local fiors of the dressed stones is represented by some twenty microscopic lichens. - Ackansaw Trav-

He recommends that a special appropriation be made to pay special deputy marshals employed during the recent elections: that marshals be allowed increased expenses in the service of process arising out of the enforcement of the Inter-State Commerce law; that the salaries of the Examiner of Calma in the report of State Assistant Attorneys in the Department of Justice and the chief clerk of that department be increased, and for a general reorganization of the clerical force of the department on a basis commensurate with its vast and increasing business. On this subject he says:

vast and increasing business. On this subject he says:

"The work of the department during the past fear was a conting to of what has been its policy during the total the present Administration, and a strict and vigorous enforcement of the laws. For searly four years the Department has kept this object in view, and the results of its action are very apparent. Because of the diligent persecution of suits for the cancellation of fraudulent patents and against timber trespassers and plunderers of the public domain, it has come to be understood that the laws enacted for the regulation of the public lands, both as to their general disposition and management, and as granted to railroads and other corporations, are of binding force, and are to be rigidly and impartially executed."
